

Honesty with yourself and others. Congruence between your beliefs and actions. Your true self.

Congruence: Living a life in harmony with your values. Your actions match your deeds.

Humility: Focus on what is right, rather than being right. Stand firm to your principles.

Courage: Act according to your principles. Do the right thing, particularly when it is hard.

Your foundational motives. Your prime agenda and the behavior the flows from it.

Motive: Genuinely caring is the motive that inspires the highest trust. Caring about people, values, and the integrity of your work.

Agenda: Seeking mutual benefit is the agenda that inspires highest trust. An earnest desire for the best for all involved.

Behavior: The highest credibility comes from acting in the best interests of everyone.

The capacity to deliver results inspires confidence. The talents, skills, knowledge, style, and attitudes we contribute.

Talents: What are my innate strengths?

Attitudes: Do I bring energy and determination to contribute to my work?

Skills: Do I spend time "sharpening my saw"?

Knowledge: What am I doing to continually learn and stay current?

Style: Does my style make things easier, or harder?

Results greatly impact your credibility. People look at your past results, what you're currently delivering, and what they believe you will deliver in the future.

Past Performance: Your track record and reputation. Your resume.

Current Performance: Producing results today, and not resting on your laurels.

Anticipated Performance: Do people have confidence that you will deliver results in the future?

Talk Straight

Honesty and telling the truth are the foundations of talking straight. Speak plainly so that people will know where you stand. Be clear and call things as you see them. Match words and actions as a sign of integrity. Manipulations and distortions of the truth are breaches of integrity. Don't spin the facts or allow people to be left with a false impression.

Counterfeit:

Being technically truthful while leaving a false impression. Using jargon to obscure reality. Omitting information that distorts the facts.

Demonstrate Respect

Show others that you care for them, without regard to their position or their ability to help you. Act in ways that value others as human beings without saccharine pretending. With people, value the relationship and not the efficiency of the transaction.

Counterfeit:

Respecting on those in power or who can benefit you. Insincere respect and care.

Create Transparency

Be clear and open with your intent. Make the truth visible in a way that people can verify for themselves. Openly acknowledge when unable to be transparent (e.g. for ethical or legal reasons). Be clear with your agenda and intent. Share information

Counterfeit:

Hidden agendas. Disguising the truth. "Seeming" rather than "being". Concealing or neglecting to share information.

Right Wrongs

Make things right when you're wrong. Be quick to apologize. When possible, make amends. Make things right even when there's no "fault". Be humble and work to restore relationships. Don't let pride push you to cover thing up or stop you from doing what's right.

Counterfeit:

Rationalization, denial and self-justification.

Show Loyalty

Don't talk about others behind their back. Represent those who aren't present to speak for themselves. Recognize the work of others. Be certain of your intent when talking about other people. Keep confidences.

Counterfeit:

Sharing credit in public, but taking it for yourself in private. Being two-faced. Gossiping or venting.

Deliver Results

Create a history of success. Get the most important things done and make the priorities happen. Do what you've committed to doing. Be on time and on budget. Don't overpromise or underdeliver. Don't make excuses for missing the mark.

Counterfeit:

Delivering activities instead of results. Output over outcomes. Pushing paper and doing busy work instead of accomplishing the most important tasks. Overpromising. Underdelivering.

Get Better

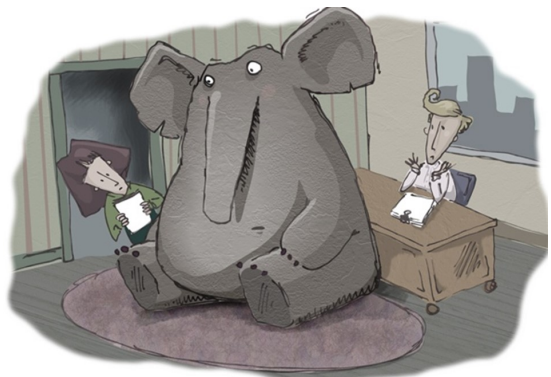

Continuously learn and improve. Don't assume what you know today will meet the challenges of tomorrow. Create systems to get feedback and act on that feedback. Accept feedback and thank others when they give it.

Counterfeit:

Learning without producing. Trying to use only what you're good at as a solution to every problem. Moving from one fad to the next without creating a lasting improvement.

Confront Reality

Face the elephant in the room head on. Name the problems that are being avoided. Be courageous in challenging difficult issues. Confront the issue not the person. Take action before issues grow into major problems. Don't ignore unpleasant realities.

Counterfeit:

Dealing with side issues while avoiding the real problem. Focusing on the easy while avoiding the hard.

Clarify Expectations

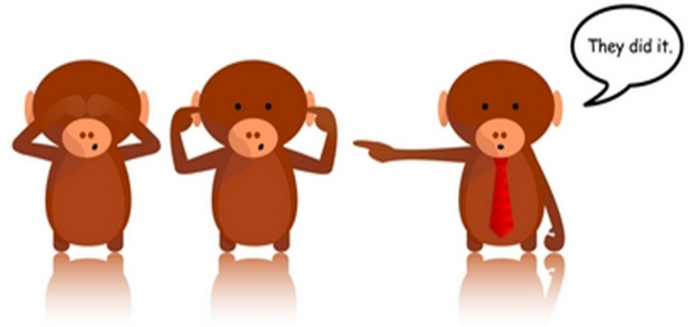

Make expectations known and understood. Talk about and validate them. If needed and able, make them common ground. Don't assume that others understand or share your expectations.

Counterfeit:

Leaving things too vague for meaningful accountability. Changing the goal to match the result. Using situational or shifting expectations tied to memory or interpretation.

Practice Accountability

Hold yourself accountable first, others second. Don't avoid responsibility. Take ownership of results, good and bad. Clarify how you will keep others informed about your progress, and how others are doing. Don't indulge in the blame game.

Counterfeit:

Blaming others. When expectations are missed, not following through on the consequences.

Listen First

Listen first, then speak. Use all your faculties to understand. Hear what people say. See how they act. Empathize with them. Don't assume you know what matters to others. Discover the behaviors that they value most. Don't assume you have all the answers, or all the questions.

Counterfeit:

Using the time that other people are talking to decide what you'll say. Listening only with your ears. Listening without trying to understand the other person's perspective.

Keep Commitments

Say what you'll do, then do what you said. Be careful when making commitments, even implied commitments. Make keeping commitments a symbol of your honor. Don't try to spin your way out of a broken commitment.

Counterfeit:

Overpromising and underdelivering. Being careless with making commitments. Making vague, elusive or non-specific commitments. Making no commitments.

Extend Trust

Be willing to trust. Give trust abundantly to those who have proven they are trustworthy. Extend trust conditionally to those earning your trust. Based on the situation, risk, and the credibility of the person involved, extend "Smart Trust". Be willing to risk extending trust.

Counterfeit:

Offering trust to someone, but then constantly hovering or micromanaging them. Granting the responsibility, but not the authority or resources. Only extending trust when there is no risk involved.
